Babysitting Blues

By Mickie Matheis
Illustrated by Laura Thomas

One afternoon at her café, Strawberry Shortcake decided to make the world's first rainbow smoothie. Her friends watched with excitement as she prepared to add the last flavor. It was her berry favorite—strawberry!

But when Strawberry pulled the handle for the strawberry juice, she got a big surprise. Purple smoothie poured out of the red spout and yellow smoothie came from the orange spout. All of the flavors and colors were mixed up!

"What's going on?" wondered Strawberry.

"Maybe something's wrong at the Berryworks," Blueberry Muffin suggested. The girls decided to go there and see for themselves.

When the girls arrived at the Berryworks, they noticed lots of things were the wrong colors. The strawberries had turned blue. The leaves had become pink. The grass was bright yellow.

And the Berrykins were behaving strangely. They were running around like they were chasing something!

"Princess Berrykin, what's causing all this?" Strawberry asked as she looked around.

"Him." The princess sighed, pointing her wand at a tiny Berrykin peeking out from behind a bush.

"His name is Baby Berrykin. And while he may be bitty, his berry sparkles are very powerful," Princess Berrykin explained. "They can change the colors of anything—not just berries."

The girls watched as the tiny Berrykin changed a ladybug from red to blue . . .
. . . and a butterfly from orange to purple . . .
. . . and Princess Berrykin's wand from pink to yellow!

Princess Berrykin was very worried. The Berry Harvest was just one day away.
If Baby Berrykin kept changing the colors of everything, it would ruin the harvest!

"What if I babysat for a day?" Strawberry offered. "That way you wouldn't have to worry about Baby Berrykin."

"Thank you, Strawberry! It would save the harvest," the princess replied gratefully.

Later that day Strawberry took Baby Berrykin to visit Lemon Meringue's salon. Lemon was styling Plum Pudding's hair.

Plum pointed to the bottle Lemon was holding. "My hair feels so greasy. Is that baby oil?"

Oh no! Baby Berrykin must have changed the colors of Lemon's bottles! She couldn't tell the shampoo from the conditioner and the baby oil.

Lemon was very upset. Now she had to do Plum's hair all over again.

Baby Berrykin giggled and ran out of the salon. Strawberry chased after him, but he was too fast. Baby Berrykin disappeared from sight.

At Bitty Mini Golf Course, Mr. Longface Caterpillar was about to win his very first game. Suddenly, all the balls turned green! Without knowing which ball belonged to which player, the game was ruined.

Mr. Longface was so disappointed.

Then he noticed Baby Berrykin giggling.

"You there!" Mr. Longface called. "Did you have something to do with this?"

But Baby Berrykin had already taken off again.

He ran through Berry Bitty City, changing colors here, there, and everywhere! He loved using his berry sparkles.

Baby Berrykin came to Raspberry Torte's Fresh Fashions Boutique and slipped inside. Blueberry Muffin was busy shopping for hats.

"I wish I had a bunch more colors to show you," Raspberry was saying to her friend.

Baby Berrykin giggled and sent berry sparkles flying around the shop. Everything—clothes, shoes, purses, and jewelry—turned different colors.

"Oh no!" Raspberry said. She looked ready to cry. Nothing was the way it was supposed to be.

At that moment, Strawberry burst into the shop.

Strawberry looked around at what the little Berrykin had done.

"Baby Berrykin," she said gently, "you need to ask before you change the colors of things."

"He changed the colors of the golf balls, too!" complained Mr. Longface, who had followed Baby Berrykin to the boutique. "And I was just about to win my first game!"

That gave Strawberry an idea. She asked Mr. Longface if she and Blueberry could take Baby Berrykin to play miniature golf.

"But he'll change the colors of the golf balls," the caterpillar said with a confused look.

"Exactly!" Strawberry whispered mysteriously.

Strawberry, Blueberry, and Baby Berrykin were having so much fun playing mini golf. But just as Blueberry was about to take her next turn, all the balls turned green!

"Well, we can't play unless we know which ball belongs to which player," Strawberry said. "If only there were a way to fix the colors . . ."

Baby Berrykin really wanted to keep playing mini golf, so he quickly changed the balls back to the correct colors. Everyone had a great time finishing the game. Baby Berrykin even got a hole in one!

"Baby Berrykin, you did a berry good job taking the berry sparkles out of the golf balls," Strawberry said. "Could you do that with the other things you changed, too, so everything looks like it did before?"

Baby Berrykin fixed the clothes at Raspberry's shop and the bottles at Lemon's salon. Then he changed all the colors throughout Berry Bitty City and the Berryworks, too. Everyone was so happy that things were back to normal!

Back at her café, Strawberry rewarded Baby Berrykin with a special treat for his good behavior: the world's first rainbow smoothie.

"Pretty—and yummy!" he giggled.

"Thank you, Baby Berrykin," said Strawberry. "I couldn't have made it without you."

The Snow Dance

By Amy Ackelsberg
Illustrated by Laura Thomas

One winter morning, Strawberry Shortcake woke up to find Berry Bitty City under a blanket of fluffy, white snow.

"How berry beautiful!" Strawberry cried. "I'm going to invite all my friends out to play."

Soon, Strawberry and her friends were bundled up in their warmest clothes and outside enjoying the snow.

Raspberry Torte and Lemon Meringue built a snowman.

Orange Blossom and Blueberry Muffin zipped down the hill on their sled.

Strawberry and Plum Pudding made snow angels.

Strawberry pointed at the snow angels. "It looks just like they're dancing!" she said.

Then Strawberry glanced at the frozen lake. "I have a fruitastic idea!" she exclaimed. "Let's put on an ice-skating show to celebrate winter!"

"What a great idea!" agreed Lemon.

"We can invite everyone in Berry Bitty City!" said Raspberry.

"Come on," said Strawberry. "We can warm up and plan the show at my café."

As the girls sipped hot chocolate, they talked about the show.

"Since Strawberry is such a great planner, she should be the director," Orange suggested.

Everyone agreed that this was a berry good idea!

Then each girl volunteered her help. Raspberry would make the costumes. Lemon would do hair and makeup. Blueberry would make the programs. And Orange would build the sets.

"And since Plum is the berry best dancer," said Strawberry, "she should be the star of the show!"

Plum spent the next afternoon teaching all her friends the dance. It was filled with lots of twirls and whirls!

"How beautiful," they all cried.
"Thank you," said Plum. "I call it the Snow Dance."

Over the next few days, Raspberry sewed costumes out of sparkly fabric.

Blueberry designed amazing programs.

Orange built a fantastic set.
Strawberry put up signs about the show.

The day before the show, the girls held one last practice on the ice.

They spun and jumped and danced and dipped.

"Berry good!" cried Strawberry.

Next, Plum practiced her solo.
She did a leap and a graceful glide,
but during her final spin . . .

. . . Plum fell on the ice!
"Oh no!" gasped Blueberry. "Are you all right?"
"I'll be okay," Plum replied. "But I can't skate in the show tomorrow."
"What will we do?" cried Lemon.
"Hmmm," said Orange. "I have an idea!"

Orange went home and worked late into the night.

The next morning, Orange asked Plum and Strawberry to come to her store. She had a surprise for them.

"I came up with a way for Plum to still be in the show!" said Orange. "She can sit in this sled while the Berrykins pull her across the ice!"

"You are the berry best!" Plum told Orange.
"The show is saved!" cried Strawberry.

Now it was time for the girls to get ready for the Snow Dance.
At Lemon's salon, Raspberry handed her friends their shimmery costumes.

Then Lemon did their hair and gave them all glittery makeup.

As everyone in Berry Bitty City settled into their seats, Strawberry, Orange, Lemon, Blueberry, and Raspberry took their places on the ice.

The music started and the girls swooped and swished and whirled and twirled. Their moves were perfect!

When Strawberry gave a special signal, the Berrykins pulled the sled onto the ice. Plum sat inside, smiling and waving to the crowd.

The audience clapped and whistled.

"Plum, you were the star of the show!" Strawberry said as she handed Plum a bunch of roses.

"Thanks. But it couldn't have happened without all of you," Plum replied. Then she gave a rose to each of her best friends. "We make the berry best team!"

Strawberry Shortcake's Spooky Night

By Lana Jacobs
Illustrated by MJ Illustrations

One afternoon, Strawberry Shortcake was shopping at Orange Blossom's store.
"Can you help me find new toys for Pupcake and Custard?" Strawberry asked.
"I know we can find them something berry special!" answered Orange.

As Strawberry was looking at the toys, she noticed some sleeping bags and tents on a nearby table.

"I have a fruitastic idea!" said Strawberry. "Let's go on a camping trip with all our friends!"

"I know just what we need," said Orange.

Strawberry and Orange picked out six sleeping bags, six flashlights, and one big tent.

"We're all set. Now we just need to invite our friends! Let's go find them," said Strawberry.

Strawberry and Orange found their friends sitting outside of Strawberry's café. Mr. Longface Caterpillar was serving them snacks.

"Who wants to go on a camping adventure tonight?" Strawberry asked.

"We do!" exclaimed Raspberry Torte, Blueberry Muffin, Lemon Meringue, and Plum Pudding.

"Mr. Longface, do you want to come, too?" asked Strawberry.

"Thank you, but I can't," he replied. "However, I know you'll have a great time!"

All the girls went home and packed their bags.
Before long, they set off on their camping adventure.

After walking for some time, the girls found a berry nice patch of grass.

"This is the perfect spot!" said Strawberry.

The girls agreed and began to set up their campsite.

Strawberry and Orange collected sticks to make a campfire.
"A fire will keep us warm when the sun goes down," said Orange.

The other girls worked together to set up the tent.

"We are going to be so cozy in here! I can't wait to snuggle into my sleeping bag tonight," said Raspberry.

As the sunlight faded, the friends noticed something berry cool!
"Look! Fireflies are lighting up the sky," said Blueberry.

"How beautiful!" said Strawberry. "It looks just like they're dancing."
"Let's dance, too!" said Plum.
The girls leaped and twirled across the field.

"All of that dancing made me berry hungry," said Lemon.

"I have just the thing—sandwiches from my café!" said Strawberry.

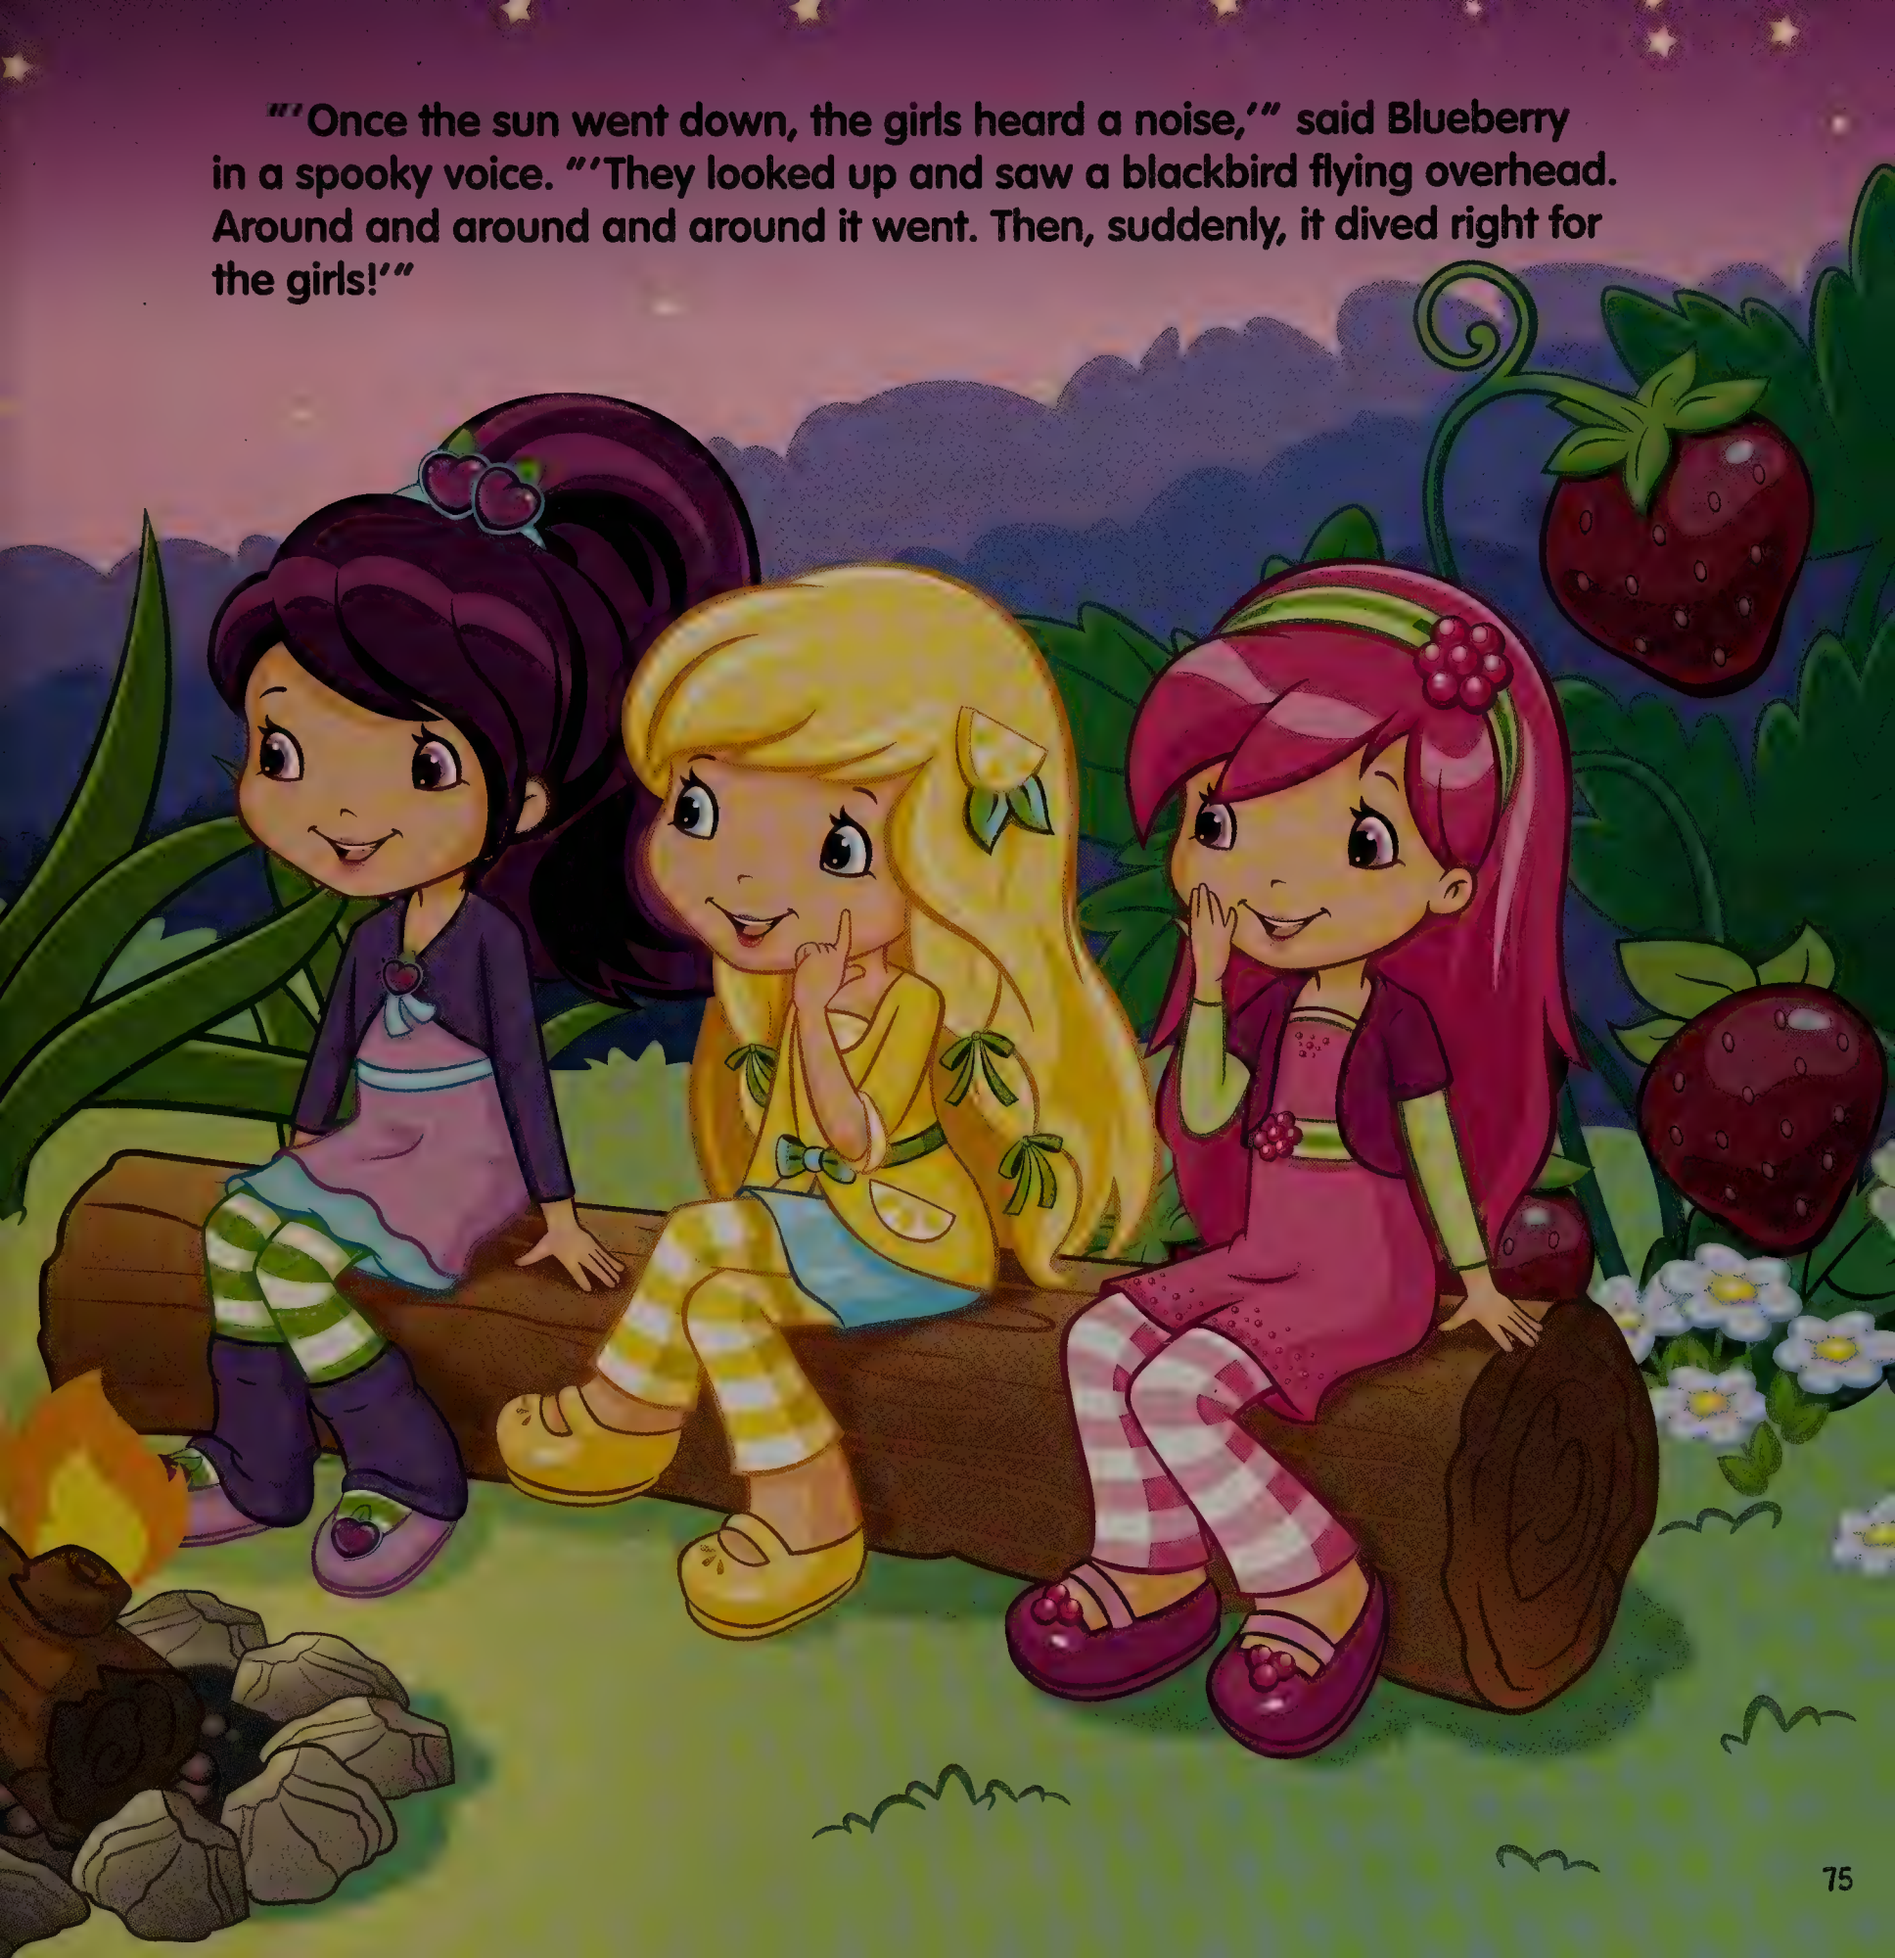
The girls sat around the campfire and snacked on the treats Strawberry had brought.

"What should we do next?" asked Orange.
"It might be fun if I read everyone a spooky story," suggested Blueberry.
Everyone was excited for the story to begin.

"'On a night just like this, in a grove just like this, six friends set out on an overnight adventure,'" Blueberry began.

"That sounds just like us! I like this story already!" said Raspberry.

"'Once the sun went down, the girls heard a noise,'" said Blueberry in a spooky voice. "'They looked up and saw a blackbird flying overhead. Around and around and around it went. Then, suddenly, it dived right for the girls!'"



Just then, there was a rustling in the bushes nearby.
"What was that?" cried Lemon.
"I don't know, but I don't like the sound of it!" said Plum.

The girls were really scared.

"What if it's a bird coming to get us—like the one from Blueberry's story?" cried Lemon.

"The story is just pretend," said Blueberry.

"But that sound wasn't," said Raspberry.

"I think we'll all feel better if we go see what made that noise," said Strawberry.

Everyone was still scared, but they trusted Strawberry.

The girls slowly walked toward the bushes. They shined their flashlights in front of them.

Strawberry pulled back a branch, and the girls were surprised to see . . .

"Mr. Longface?!" cried Strawberry and her friends.

"Hello there!" he said. "I hope I didn't scare you. I didn't want to miss out on the fun."

"We are berry happy to see you!" cried Plum.
"We thought you were a bird coming to get us!" said Lemon.
But then the girls heard another noise coming from the bushes.
"Oh no! Did anyone else hear that?" asked Blueberry.

Suddenly, Pupcake and Custard burst out of the bushes.

"Looks like they didn't want to miss the fun, either!" said Mr. Longface.

As everyone gathered around the campfire, Strawberry said, "This wasn't just a spooky night, it was a berry great adventure!"

Best Friends Forever

By Samantha Brooke
Illustrated by Marci Beighley, MJ Illustrations, Laura Thomas,
Lisa Workman, and Terry Workman

Welcome to Berry Bitty City. This is where Strawberry Shortcake and her best friends live.

Strawberry owns a café where everyone in town likes to hang out.

She's usually mixing up a batch of fruitastic smoothies or relaxing with her pets, Pupcake and Custard!

Come on! Let's go meet Strawberry's friends!

This is Lemon Meringue. She gives the best manicures and hairstyles in town. That's why she has her berry own beauty salon!

Blueberry Muffin loves to read so much that she opened her own bookstore. It's the perfect place in Berry Bitty City to shop for a new book, use the computer, or write in a journal.

Welcome to Orange Blossom's general store. It's packed with everything anyone could ever need. Orange is also really handy. So if something needs fixing, she's the one to call!

This is Raspberry Torte. She's superstylish and owns her own clothing boutique. Need a new skirt, costume, or fancy dress? Raspberry can whip up a design and sew just about anything.

Plum Pudding runs the dance studio in Berry Bitty City. Every week, Strawberry and all her friends take dance classes here. Sometimes it's hard to learn a new dance routine, but the girls always try their berry best.

Strawberry and her friends are always having fun together. Let's see what kinds of things they like to do!

Strawberry and her friends think sleepovers are berry cool!

When they get together, Lemon gives her friends makeovers, Plum teaches new dance moves, and Orange brings a funny movie for everyone to watch.

Some days are just too beautiful to spend indoors.

So Strawberry packs her friends a delicious lunch and they go for picnics by the waterfall. Everyone loves being outside—especially Custard and Pupcake.

Strawberry and her friends love to dress up as princesses, so Raspberry sews everyone sparkly gowns. When the girls put on their dresses, they like to pretend to go to fancy balls.

There's nothing like camping in Berry Bitty Grove!

When the girls head out for an overnight adventure, they tell spooky stories around the campfire and then snuggle into their sleeping bags.

At Plum's dance studio, Strawberry and her friends take dance classes and twirl and whirl across the dance floor.

And sometimes they put on special ballet recitals for everyone in Berry Bitty City.

When the weather is warm, Strawberry and her friends like to go to the beach. Lemon and Strawberry have fun splashing in the water.

Orange collects shells while the other girls relax in the shade.

Strawberry and her friends are always having berry fun adventures. But the best adventure of all is simply spending time with your sweetest friends!

Makeover Madness

By Samantha Brooke
Illustrated by Laura Thomas

It was a berry busy day at Lemon Meringue's beauty salon.

Lemon zipped around the salon serving her friends tea and painting their nails. Then she shampooed their hair and combed out the tangles.

"I wish I could work faster," said Lemon. "There's just so much to do!"
"Um, Lemon," said Blueberry Muffin. "I think something's wrong."
"Me too," said Orange Blossom.

All of Lemon's friends were giggling. They had berry wild hair!

"I'm so sorry!" cried Lemon. "I guess I tried to do too many things at once. But don't worry. I can fix everything."

When Lemon was done, everyone's hair was perfect.
"Now why don't we all go for a picnic?" Strawberry suggested.
Lemon decided to stay behind. "My salon needs a bit of a makeover," she said.
"Okay," said Plum Pudding. "We'll see you later!"

That afternoon Lemon cleaned her salon from top to bottom.
When she was done, she flipped open a magazine. Suddenly she gasped.
"What a fruitastic idea!" she cried. "I can't wait until my friends see this!"

The next day Lemon invited all her friends back to the salon.
"Hey, Lemon," said Plum Pudding. "What did you want to show us?"
"This!" Lemon said. She pointed to a very strange salon chair.

Raspberry looked confused. "But what is it?" she asked.

"It's the Salon-o-Matic," said Lemon. "It does manicures like magic, gives perfect pedicures, and styles hair faster than you've ever seen before!"

"Who wants to go first?" asked Lemon.
"I'll give it a try," said Strawberry.
Lemon pressed a button and the Salon-o-Matic whirred and buzzed.
A few seconds later a bell dinged. Strawberry's hair was berry perfect!

"Wow!" said Strawberry as she looked in the mirror. "This is incredible."
"I know," cried Lemon. "Now who wants to go next?"
"Me! Me! Me!" Lemon's friends shouted at the same time.

A few days later, Lemon called Blueberry to see if she needed a trip to the salon.

"No, thank you," said Blueberry.

Lemon called her other friends. But they didn't need a haircut or manicure, either.

Later Strawberry stopped by the salon to visit Lemon.

"How are you, Lemon?" asked Strawberry.

"I don't have anything to do," Lemon answered. "The Salon-o-Matic did all my work for me."

"Then why don't you come help me at the café?" Strawberry suggested.

At Strawberry's café, Lemon made a batch of smoothies. But they didn't taste as good as the ones Strawberry usually made.

Lemon sighed. "Maybe someone else in town needs my help," she said.

"Okay," said Strawberry. "Thanks for the help, anyway."

Next Lemon helped teach a dance class at Plum's studio.
"You did great," said Plum when the class ended.
But Lemon didn't think Berry Bitty City needed another dance teacher.
So she decided to go home.

When Orange and Blueberry went to see Lemon, she was packing a suitcase.
"Where are you going?" cried Blueberry.
"To Big Bitty City," said Lemon. "Since I got the Salon-o-Matic, no one needs me."

"But, Lemon, we all want you here," said Orange.
"Don't look so sad," Lemon said. "I'll come back and visit—a lot!"
As Lemon walked to the bus stop, Blueberry got an idea.

Lemon was waiting at the bus stop when her friends came running up to her.
"Lemon, help!" Plum cried.
"Look what the Salon-o-Matic did to us!" said Blueberry.
"Oh no," cried Lemon. "Quick—let's get back to the salon."

Lemon shampooed, conditioned, and blow-dried her friends' hair. Soon they looked berry perfect again.

"Thanks, Lemon," said Orange.

"What would we have done without you?" asked Blueberry.

"I wonder what went wrong with the Salon-o-Matic," Lemon said.

Strawberry looked at her friends. They all felt berry badly that they had tricked Lemon.

"Um . . . Lemon," said Blueberry. "There's actually nothing wrong with the Salon-o-Matic."

"What?" said Lemon. She was very confused.

"We gave ourselves crazy hairstyles so that you would stay and help us," said Strawberry.

"Oh," said Lemon slowly. "Well, if the Salon-o-Matic really works, then I'm not needed here anymore."

"Wait!" cried Strawberry. "There are lots of things that a gadget can't do."

"It can't tell you that you look pretty and laugh at your jokes," said Orange.

"And it doesn't have a shoulder to cry on," Plum added.

"And worst of all—it doesn't give hugs," Strawberry said. "Lemon, we love you for who you are. That machine could never replace you!"

"So what do you say, Lemon?" asked Strawberry. "Are you going to stay?"
"Yes!" Lemon cried. "But I have to do one thing first."
"What?" asked all her friends.
Lemon giggled. Then she said, "Send the Salon-o-Matic back!"

Berry Bitty Bakers

By Amy Ackelsberg
Illustrated by MJ Illustrations

It was the day before the Berry Bitty Baking Contest. Strawberry Shortcake and her friends were excited to see who could bake the berry best treats.

"I'm going to make a strawberry cheesecake!" said Strawberry.
"I want to make a plum tart," added Plum Pudding.
"I think I'll make lemon bars," said Lemon Meringue.
Orange Blossom, Blueberry Muffin, and Raspberry Torte said they'd rather taste treats than bake them.

"It's going to take a lot of work to make our recipes the berry best they can be," said Strawberry. "We should start baking at the café right away."

"I'll come over later," said Lemon. "I have some things to do first."

At the café, Plum and Strawberry measured and mixed their ingredients.

Then they put their treats in the oven to bake. Soon the kitchen was filled with sweet smells.

A little while later, Strawberry took her cheesecake out of the oven. But the top was burned!

"Oh bitterberries!" exclaimed Strawberry. "I need to try again."

When Plum tasted her tart, she thought it was too sour.
"Looks like I'll have to make another one if I want to win!" she said.

Meanwhile, Lemon went on a scooter ride with Orange and Raspberry.
"The baking contest is tomorrow," said Orange. "I can't wait!"
"How did your lemon bars come out?" Raspberry asked Lemon.
"I haven't started them yet," said Lemon. "But they won't take long to make."

Later Lemon visited Blueberry's bookstore.
"Hi, Lemon," said Blueberry. "Are you ready for the baking contest?"
"Not yet," replied Lemon. "I'll make my lemon bars later."

By the time Lemon arrived at Strawberry's café, it was berry late.
"How did the baking go?" Lemon asked Strawberry.
"It took a few tries, but we got our recipes just right," said Strawberry.
"Good luck baking. See you in the morning."

Lemon rushed around the café gathering the ingredients for her lemon bars. Soon the kitchen was a mess! There was flour on the counter and an egg splattered on the floor.

"I hope I can finish in time!" cried Lemon.

In the morning, everyone in town gathered for the contest.

Besides Plum, Lemon, and Strawberry, the other contestants were Jadeybug, Berrykin Bloom, and Postmaster Bumblebee.

Everyone watched as Mr. Longface, the judge, tasted all the treats.

Mr. Longface smiled when he tasted most of the entries. But he made a funny face when he tried Lemon's lemon bars.

"The results are in!" announced Mr. Longface. "And the winner is . . ."

". . . Plum Pudding!" exclaimed Mr. Longface.
"Thank you!" cried Plum.
"Mr. Longface, why didn't you like my lemon bars?" asked Lemon.
"I'm sorry, Lemon. But they were too salty," said Mr. Longface.

"Salty? How did that happen?" cried Lemon.

Lemon looked at Plum and thought, "Plum really wanted to win. Maybe she sprinkled salt on my lemon bars!"

Then Lemon said, "Plum, did you do something to ruin my lemon bars?"

"That's not berry nice!" Plum exclaimed. "I would never do something like that."

Plum was so upset that she ran straight home. Blueberry and Raspberry hurried after her.

"I don't think Plum would ruin your lemon bars," Orange explained to Lemon.

"Hmm . . . there must be another explanation," said Strawberry. "Let's go to my café. Maybe we can figure out what happened."

At the café, Lemon started to clean up the mess she had made the night before.

"Lemon, you shouldn't jump to conclusions," Strawberry told her. "There's no proof that Plum did anything wrong. She's your friend."

"I know," Lemon replied, "but . . ."

"Oh no!" Lemon cried suddenly. She saw that she had left a box of salt next to her mixing bowl.

"I must have added salt instead of sugar!" said Lemon.
"It was my fault, not Plum's!"
Lemon felt terrible that she had blamed Plum for her mistake.
Then Lemon had an idea.
She got out the sugar and started to make a new batch of lemon bars.

When Lemon was finished baking, she went to Plum's dance studio. Strawberry and Orange went, too.

"Plum, I'm sorry that I blamed you for ruining my lemon bars. It was my own fault that I didn't win," Lemon said. "I was rushing to finish and not being careful."

Then Lemon gave Plum the new batch of lemon bars.

"Lemon, you really hurt my feelings," said Plum. "But I accept your apology."

"Thank you," said Lemon. "You worked hard to make your tart the berry best! You deserved to win."

Plum shared the lemon bars with all her friends.

"Lemon, these are delicious!" said Plum. "What a sweet treat!"

"Thank you," Lemon replied. "But sharing them with my berry best friends is the sweetest treat of all."
